Due to the risk of Avian Flu, water fowl and water fowl eggs are not going to be allowed again this year. Because of the higher risk of migratory birds, water fowl are at a much higher risk and that they don’t show clinical signs, they pose even a greater risk. The recommendation is that if you have poultry and water fowl, that you separate the two and do not allow poultry to occupy the ground that has had water fowl on it. If you have attractants for water fowl on your property, you also need to prevent contact with incoming water fowl.
